Continuing the Conversation

Talk to your kids about people in their lives that have disabilities. It does not have to be a person in a wheelchair, or even someone with a physical disability. Discuss how life might be different for that person. When you are out with your child, talk about accommodations for people with wheelchairs. What places are they able to access that you frequent? What would be much more difficult. Spend time with others, especially children, who have disabilities. Encourage your child to develop friendships with children with disabilities. Talk about how those friendships differ from others and how they are the same.
